A DIFFERENT ENDING

by Mickey Klar Marks

"HAVE you looked in the pond?" the black kitten cried.

"Of course. I looked three times," Silver, the grey kitten, replied indignantly, "and I tell you they aren't there."

"What about the coal bin?" Whitey, the third kitten, asked. "We were playing there and we might have lost our—"

"Mittens! My goodness!" Bandy Beaver poked his head from under the log he was gnawing on. "Don't tell me you three kittens have lost your mittens again!"

The three little kittens hung their silky heads.

"Uh-huh," they chorused.

"We can't help it," Blackie shouted belligerently. "Somehow mittens and kittens don't stay together very long. It's worse for us than for you, anyway."

"You ought to hear yourselves," the beaver snorted.

"That isn't the point. We're the ones that don't get any pie."

The minute Whitey and Silver heard that, they began to howl. "Meow, meow, now we shall have no pie."

"Just like a broken record," Bandy said. "You couldn't have looked very hard. If you'd follow your own story, you'd have found them long ago."

"Something must have happened to our story. It's not coming out right." Silver shook his head.

Bandy Beaver leaned against his log thoughtfully. Suddenly he banged his flat tail excitedly. "Hey," he shouted, "change the story."

The three little kittens clapped their paws. "But how?"

"Help yourselves," Bandy advised. And with that he went back to gnawing his log.

"Help ourselves." Silver twitched his tail.

"Do something about it." Whitey twitched his pink nose.

"Change the story," Blackie reflected. "Wow! Kittens, come on. I have an idea."

Like a streamer of velvet ribbon Blackie dashed off, the other kittens behind him. They ran all the way to the sheepfold on Farmer Thomas's farm, only stopping long enough to pick up six sticks.

"Hello, Mrs. Sheep," Blackie greeted. "We've lost our mittens again."

"I wouldn't grin about it," Mrs. Sheep scolded. "You know your mother will be angry and she won't give you pie."

"Oh, yes she will. For with your help, we're rewriting the story."

Blackie stood on tiptoe and whispered something to Mrs. Sheep. Her eyes twinkled and a grin spread itself over her face. "Why, that's very clever. I'll give you some, of course."

Mrs. Sheep hurried to the cupboard where her wool was kept and took out three balls of yarn.

They cast the wool on their stick needles and clickety click, all of a sudden the three little kittens had made three pairs of mittens.

"Thank you, Mrs. Sheep," Blackie said. "Now we're off for home."

Away the kittens went. They arrived in time for supper. Mrs. Cat looked surprised when she saw them with mittens.

"Why, you darling kittens, you've found your mittens." Then she stopped. "How did you find them?" she asked in a puzzled voice.

"We didn't, Mommy. But Bandy Beaver told us there were times when people should help themselves and we did."

Then they told her how they'd made the mittens. And did they get the pie? They certainly did—two large slices for being so clever.
